Theme

Economic shocks generating financial crises tend to increase the vulnerability of financial systems and exploit the systems' imbalances. Recovery from crisis depends on the means and speed with which policymakers respond to the suddenly changing economic environment. In financial crises, irrespective of the causes, many common recurring elements can be detected, often resulting in similar tools used in crisis management. However, due to the different economic environments and the changing causes of crises, the long-term effects of crisis management are difficult to model in advance. Therefore, it is very important to have a comprehensive picture of the financial crisis, its causes, crisis management methods and their predictable effects.

Call for Papers

The Partium Christian University, the University of Debrecen, and the University of Óbuda invite an international scientific audience to submit paper proposals in the fields of Economics, Economic Policy, Finance, and any other field referring to the theme of the conference. The following topics are expected to be discussed:

- International financial crisis
- The role of global financial markets
- Capital flows and recovery
- Contagion, speculative bubbles, and crashes
- Recessionary effects and consequences
- Causes and Solutions of the Global Financial Crisis
- Macroeconomic reasons behind the financial crisis management
- Inflation and Business Cycle Dynamics
- CSR during the stressful time
- Social impacts of financial crises
- Other topics

The conference intends to discuss and analyse financial crises focusing on the topics related to major economic disturbances and the efficiency and effects of crisis management methods used in the past years.

Participants, who intend to contribute with a paper, are requested to upload an extended abstract of 1200-1500 characters in English, key words in English, as well as JEL classification codes by 9 May 2022, using link accessed from the conference official webpage: <https://gtt.partium.ro/en/international-finance-conference>

The abstract should indicate: 1) the question addressed, 2) the concepts and theories to which one refers, 3) the methodology used, 4) the results obtained, and 5) conclusions.

The early-bird registration fee is 150 RON until 29 April 2022 and can be paid online <https://payment.partium.ro/>, or 250 RON from 30 April 2022, paid on site. This includes lunch on both conference days, dinner on the first day, coffee during the breaks, and the publishing of accepted papers in the conference abstract book. Accommodation is not included.
